

ABSTRACT

The described embodiments relate to processing systems and means for controlling processing systems. One exemplary method includes sensing for a human presence in a region proximate a processing system
5 independently of any human engagement of the processing system. The method further includes generating a signal based on the sensing; and, controlling at least one user-perceptible output of the processing system based, at least in part, on the signal.